We cordially invite partners from industry and research & development centres to contribute to the Future Air Force Panel – New Generation Aircraft 2022.

This is an ideal way to demonstrate your organization's commitment to the field of air power and to publicize your capability and insights to relevant stakeholders. Partners' inputs also help inform users and researchers about new applications, technologies and opportunities.

The Czech Air Force is due to replace its current fleet of the JAS-39 Gripen soon. This constitutes a similar challenge as was the replacement of the Soviet-made MIG aircraft 20 years ago. However, exponential technological development and unpredictability of current and future battlefield make this task increasingly difficult and ever-more complex. This complexity is, for example, well reflected in terminology as we now use the term Air Combat System, rather than aircraft.

The aim of the Future Air Force Panel – New Generation Aircraft is to address some of these complexities and challenges by focusing in particular on the following areas:

- Future Security environment and the role of the NATO Air power within it
- The Czech approach towards Future Air Combat System (FACS)
- Integration of the Czech Future Air Combat System into the NATO multidomain operations
- Future education and training
- Role of the Czech defence, security and academic sectors in supporting the Future Air Combat System

The conference is divided in two separate blocks with interconnected topics.

FIRST BLOCK

28 April 2022 | Hotel DAP Prague (next to the Czech Armed Forces General Staff)

The first block will focus on the area of the air power and its role in future joint operation as well as all aspects emerging from the FACS integration into national C4ISTAR system.

SECOND BLOCK

20 October 2022 | PVA EXPO Prague within the Future Forces Exhibition & Forum 2022

The second block will focus on training of Air Force personnel and the role of the national defence industry within FACS integration.

Your support is very important to the conference and the conference committee ensures that these contributions are well recognized.
